Student Requirements for Completion of the Course and Due Dates

This class presents an introduction to what the theatre is about: how and where it happens, who makes it happen and how they do it, and - most importantly - WHY theatre is essential to our lives and our society.

We will discuss and examine the nature of art and specifically theatre as a fine art, the roles in and functions of all participants in theatre (playwrights, directors, designers, actors), major dramatic forms and genres, and take a closer look at several individuals and groups who are important contributors to modern theatre.

These are what I call the “RULES OF THE GAME”:

1. You are required to see two theatrical productions this semester: 33 VARIATIONS (produced by the Texarkana Repertory Company, performance dates Sept. 5-7, 12-14); and THE GLASS MENAGERIE (produced by the TC Drama Department and the Texarkana Repertory Company, performance dates Nov., 7-9, 14-16). If you sign up to usher, you may see the shows for free.

2. You will turn in a three-page typewritten critique of the production (we will discuss the specifics of each paper in class.
3. You may receive Extra Credit with critiques of additional productions, as agreed upon by the professor.
4. We will read approximately six (6) plays over the course of the semester. For each play you will write a 'Play Card.' On 3x5 index cards give the following information (one card per play):

Title

Author

of Acts/Characters (ex: 3 Acts; 5m 3f)

A. Give examples of what makes the play important in the scope of theatrical history

B. Evaluate the work on your own terms. (Did you like it? Why? Why not?)

Play cards will be turned in when you arrive for the Final Exam.

5. You will be quizzed on each play read for class from the Anthology and each chapter read for class from the Text.
6. You must spend a minimum of 30 minutes a week using the online Lab for The Art of the Theatre. We will go over details in class.

Student Assessment

Grading will be based on averaging of Class Participation/Discussion, Quizzes, Critiques, Play Cards and any Extra Credit.
